FROM THE TEXAS SOCIETY COMMANDER

Gentlemen of the Texas Society,

The Texas convention is fast approaching. I hope you can take time to join us in Huntsville. We always have a good time, but as they say, "The more the merrier."

Make your reservation today while you're thinking about it. Call 936-295-4300 for the Huntsville Holiday Inn Express. Ask for the "MOSB" or "Military Order of the Stars and Bars" rate. You can go to the Texas web site for more information, www.texasmosb.com.

We have a few Texas items to discuss and we want to be getting ready for the National Convention in Oklahoma City scheduled for the last of April. I hope you are making plans now for your chapter to be represented in Oklahoma. This is an election year and we need a strong turn out from Texas.

I would like everyone to think about who they know in the Order that is making a difference and recommend them to me as candidates for an award at National. As you know there are several different awards and I know there are Texans deserving of them.

I am at your service,
Commander

Unknown Soldier of the Confederacy Laid to Rest in Far North

By G. Jeffrey MacDonald

Special to The Herald-Sun April 22, 2001

Sent along by Compatriot Dale Fowlkes DCS

DURHAM, Maine ~ Though the final battles of the Civil War put untold numbers of Confederate soldiers in caskets marked "Durham" for several towns by that name, only one ended up here in Durham, Maine. That one most likely missed the soldier's Durham, N.C. home in a shipping mix-up, only to arrive here unidentified on the doorstep of a bewildered local family. Although no one ever learned his name, the town this weekend ensured that his role ~ as an American soldier and son of the Confederacy ~ would never be forgotten.

To the tune of "Dixie", dozens of Civil War re-enactors in blue and gray dedicated a freshly engraved tombstone Saturday on the site where townspeople buried the unknown Confederate more than 130 years ago. For participants, it was a fitting, if belated, tribute. "By some terrible twist of fate, this soldier of the South was sent here, never to see his homeland again," said Hall Hoffner, Confederate chaplain at the ceremony. "For a long time, no one cared. But we care. He died a Confederate soldier. But here lies an American soldier."

How he came to lie in this farming town of 3,300, seven miles northwest of the headquarters of the L.L. Bean mail-order business, is a mystery. Local historian Stevens Bunker figures a Maine family sent for one of their own and received the wrong casket. Perhaps, he said, a family in Durham, N.C. received the body of a Union soldier from Durham, Maine. But because the town's burial records burned 100 years ago, even the most dedicated sleuths find themselves at a loss.

What is certain, however, is that Mainers have honored his Confederate roots with increased attention in recent years. For decades, veterans groups put only an American flag on the unmarked gravesite once a year. But for the past six years, Memorial Day has brought out Confederate flags and a rendition of "Dixie" on the fife. Now the new headstone features a cross and reads like many scattered across the South: "UNKNOWN, C.S.A.," for Confederate States of America.

In a region where Confederate symbols are more controversial than popular, surging interest in the unknown's heritage begs an explanation. It wasn't immediately obvious, for instance, why Kathy Gowen drove an hour with her daughter to play the part of the unknown Confederate's widow at the occasion. But she had a reason, one that others echoed throughout the day. "He fought for a cause," Gowen said. "He deserves the same accolades of any soldier who we'd bury today."

Accolades he got. The presence of local selectmen, a state legislator and honor guards from as far away as Mississippi made the grave dedication Durham's social event of the season. And the 200-plus who turned out for it tasted a proportional helping of pageantry. Uniformed Confederate re-enactors led a processional march down U.S. 9 from Durham Elementary School to Strout Cemetery. Then came Union soldiers, drummers and flute players, women and children decked out in period attire. Had it not been for the leafless tree limbs and patches of melting snow among the graves, a passer-by could have thought he was in 1865 North Carolina.

"This is one of the few times in the North where we're really able to showcase our Confederate heritage and what it means to be Southern," said Syndi Holmes, a Portland resident who counts five Virginia Confederates among her ancestors. "It's nice to be able to do it without a lot of issues surrounding it."

The liturgical service first honored Maine volunteers whose donations brought the headstone from idea to reality. Later, Hoffner preached a sermon, all said the Lord's Prayer and the 15th Alabama Honor Guard re-enactors fired a salute. Someone played "Taps" on a bugle, and everyone sang the first three verses of "Nearer My God to Thee." Then they adjourned to a reception at the Congregational church in the center of town. The gravesite, meanwhile, has not seen the end of its ornamentation. Collector Darrell English of Charlemont, Mass., blocked the illegal auction of a stolen Confederate grave marker in 1998 and later acquired it from police in Saratoga Springs, N.Y. As soon as it can be permanently secured, it will adorn the gravesite in Durham, Maine. "It seems right that a marker taken from an unknown grave would come to mark the grave of an unknown soldier," said Thomas DiGiuesppe, New England Commander of the Sons of Confederate Veterans.

The gathering Saturday morning adorned the head stone with flowers, a wreath and a Confederate-gray uniform at its base. And with them they carried away a sense of having done the right thing. "We know there are a lot of Maine boys buried down South, since most of the action during the war took place down there," Bunker said. "And we know our friends down South will take as good care of our boys as we're taking care of this one here."

Albert Sidney Johnston Chapter #5
NOW The Texas Chapter #5
Houston, Texas

The Texas Chapter, Military Order of the Stars & Bars, the first chapter in Texas, was chartered on June 30, 1970, in Houston, Texas. In those days, Chapters affiliated with SCV Camps, and the Texas Chapter affiliated with the now defunct Dick Dowling Camp #1305.

38 members of the MOS&B came together to form this once great Chapter. A number of notable Texans were among this group, including Msgr. Anton Frank of the Houston-Galveston Diocese, two future Commanders General of the MOS&B, Dennis W. Rainoshek and Dr. Ralph W. Widener, Jr. One of the Charter members is our current Adjutant-General Toni Richard Turk. About ten years ago this chapter ceased to exist because of lack of interest and lack of new blood to replace those who passed away.

Albert Sidney Johnston Chapter #5 of Houston was formed shortly after The Texas Chapter and affiliated with Albert Sidney Johnston Camp #67, SCV. Two Heritage organizations of the same name in the same city has always caused confusion. ASJ#5 has been the largest Chapter in the MOS&B for several years and is also one of the most active. It was decided at the recent business meeting to change the name of ASJ#5 to The Texas Chapter #5 for two reasons: 1) eliminate the similar name confusion with the local SCV Camp, and 2) restore the great traditions of The Texas Chapter.

When The Texas Chapter first organized, they conceived the idea of presenting a replica of the Davis Guard Medal to any person who made a substantial contribution to preserving Southern Heritage. The Davis Guard Medal was the only medal awarded by the CSA during the War Between the States. It was given to Lt. Dick Dowling and his small group of men who defeated the Yankees as they attempted to invade Texas at Sabine Pass. The Davis Guard Award, as presented by The Texas Chapter, is similar to the ASJ#5 Ron Aldis Award that was conceived after Ron's death several years ago. These two honors will be merged. We have a list of all the past recipients of the Davis Guard Award and it looks like a Who's Who of great compatriots. Included on that list of 33 are Dr. Frank Vandiver, Ralph Green, Charles Smith, Pete Orlebeke, Jim Vogler, several UDC presidents, and Dr. William McCain, to mention a few.

It is the intent of ASJ#5, now The Texas Chapter #5, to restore the honor of this great Chapter and the honor of the men who put The Texas Chapter on the forefront of the Military Order of the Stars & Bars.

Col. Richard B. Hubbard Chapter #261
Tyler, Texas

The Third Annual Lee-Jackson Dinner sponsored by the Col. Richard B. Hubbard Chapter was held on January 23, 2010. It was another successful Birthday Party. I think our speaker, Rev. Don Majors, was fantastic. He spoke on Being Southern, The Confederacy, what is happening now, and the Twin Towers, Lee and Jackson.

It was an enjoyable evening. The food is always good and the restaurant had been remodeled and enlarged since we were there last year. In addition to folks from our Tyler area, we had several people from the Sulphur Springs area, and from as far away as San Antonio, Texas - Compatriot Egon Tausch, and his wife, Phyllis. (See article-"Secret Ledger"-Page 5). There were at least five Confederate Heritage organizations represented: Military Order of Stars and Bars, Sons of Confederate Veterans, Descendants of Confederate Veterans, Order of Confederate Rose, and United Daughters of the Confederacy. We are all looking forward to the fourth celebration next year.

Mr. Tausch asked me if I would read "The Secret Ledger", and put a review in the Clarion Call. I have never done a book review, but I liked this book very much, and I think it will be enjoyed by everyone who reads it. The book includes a lot of history which had been unknown to me, and with emphasis on the War Between the States and Reconstruction, along with the detailed ledger of the Early Texas Doctor of German heritage, it should be of special interest to our members; and is a book which needs to be read by every Texan, and non-Texan.

Mr. Tausch is a practicing attorney in San Antonio. A fifth generation Texan, he has been a rancher, a professional army officer and a history professor at West Point. He was a decorated combat infantry leader in Vietnam.

Mr. Tausch has had countless articles in publications as varied as The National Review, Chronicles of American Culture, The Handbook of Texas, The Texas Republic, Southern Partisan, and numerous legal, military, and educational periodicals. He is currently working on a book about The Texas Germans in The Southern Crisis, which is definitive, and dispels a long-held myth. His research shows that most Texas Germans supported the Confederacy. Mr. Tausch has written several other books and articles, with more upcoming.

Compatriot:

A communication recently came to my attention regarding the Together We Served websites. I have thoroughly investigated these sites, and I highly recommend them to the military veterans and current active duty servicemen, who are members of the MOS&B. I have created profiles for myself, my father (deceased), my father-in-law (deceased), my father-in-law's brother who was KIA in the Hurtgen Forest during WWII, and a great uncle who was KIA due to U-Boat activity during WWI. One of my sons has also chosen to list his veteran status. Under "Additional Information" members may list their affiliation with heritage groups, such as the MOS&B - should they choose to do so. There is a "Military Association Memberships" section where an individual lists associations for their personal military service, e.g. VFW.

Those wishing to check these sites out may do so by clicking on the following URLs:

<http://army.togetherweserved.com>

<http://coastguard.togetherweserved.com>

Currently profiles exist for Air Force 106,433, Army 258,666, Coast Guard 3,788, Marines 257,521, & Navy 482,521. You may find one of your buddies there. You can check out my own profile under the Army link. Should you choose to post a profile, you'll be prompted for a member referral number. You may use mine, which is 261863. Edward Clark, Unknown and Unsung Hero of Texas and the Confederacy

By Ray Stocks

Just across the street from the South entrance to the State Capitol grounds, is what you would call a "pocket park" of less than a quarter of an acre. There are a few benches and stuck away in its southwestern corner is a life-sized statue identified as "Edward Clark, March 16, 1815-May 4, 1880, Governor of Texas 1861." Here, out of the way and likely unnoticed is a smallish statue of a one year governor.

We all have heard of Sam Houston - he was crammed down my throat as a Texas hero throughout my school years. Well, when Houston refused to sign the Ordinance of Secession drafted and approved by the citizens of Texas, he was booted out of the Governor's office and replaced by his Lt. Governor, Edward Clark, who did sign the Ordinance. For that reason alone, I had come to consider Houston as a traitor to Texas rather than a hero.

In the University of Texas archives is a collection of Clark's papers. As Governor of a Confederate State, he was charged with recruiting an army for Jefferson Davis, as well as pursuing the war against the Union here in Texas. In his papers, he outlined to Davis the huge problems he was faced with at home. First was the defense of his citizens against Indian attacks, notably from the Comanches. The Union was supposed to furnish a defense against the Indians for the past 15 years and had failed to do so and that was one of the primary complaints that Texas had in the Secession Ordinance and the original purpose of the Texas Rangers. Secondly, and this blew me away, SAM HOUSTON HAD RAISED AN ARMY AND WAS ATTACKING PRO-CONFEDERATE COUNTIES HERE IN TEXAS TO THWART THE SOUTH'S WAR EFFORT! Like most of you, I had always believed that after Houston was booted out of office he quietly retired to his home in Huntsville and had no part in future politics or the War. Were we ever wrong, instead he pursued his Union sympathies long after! It is said that toward the end of the War, Houston relented in his stance and came around to the Southern Cause, as did Ben McCullough and other opponents of the cause.

In spite of the aforementioned handicaps, Clark was able to hold the Comanches at bay, defeat Houston's efforts to undermine the War effort and still furnish thousands of troops and huge amounts of materiel to the South.

I guess it was due to the reputation that Houston gained in the Texas Independence of 1836, (I even have my doubts about that in that I have never forgiven him for abandoning two of my ancestors along with the others at the Alamo and leaving them to face overwhelming Mexican forces alone while he retreated to San Jacinto) but in 1862 and particularly in Gainesville, Texas, many people were hung for their Union sympathies, how did they miss Sam Houston?

Clark was defeated when he ran for re-election by a mere 124 votes so he joined the Confederate Army as a Colonel in the 14th Texas Infantry. He was wounded at Pleasant Hill, Louisiana, and later was promoted to Brigadier General before his discharge. After the War, he went to Mexico briefly (I am left to wonder if General Jo Shelby had anything to do with that) and returned to business and a law practice in Marshall, Texas where he died.

Now my part of the story gets weird. I had a number of ancestors in the Marshall area between 1845 and 1880, some of them were Evans. When I was reading about Clark, the fact that he went to Marshall in 1841 (as did my gggrandfather), practiced law there before and after the War (ditto my gggrandfather) were they acquainted or related? It turns out that Clark's wife was Martha Evans of Marshall whom he married in 1849 and she was the sister of my gggrandfather's mother! Ain't genealogy grand.

I hope that you enjoyed this brief look at Edward Clark and that you will join with me in commemorating this great Texan and Southerner. It's about time!

Below I have listed some of his accomplishments.

Military Order of the Stars and Bars Pledge

We, the posterity of the Officer Corps and Civil Officials of the Confederacy, do pledge ourselves to commemorate and honor the service of leadership these men rendered in the Cause of the fundamental American principles of self determination and States' Rights and to perpetuate the true history of their deeds for the edification of ourselves, our society, and for generations yet unborn.

FELIX HUSTON
ROBERTSON
1839 – 1928

Robertson was the last survivor of the general officers of the Confederacy and the only native Texan to achieve a wreath around his stars. He was born at Washington, Texas, March 9, 1839, the son of General Jerome B. Robertson. He attended Baylor University when it was located at Independence, Texas. He was appointed to West Point in 1857, but resigned January 29, 1861, to offer services to the Confederacy.

Commissioned 2nd Lieutenant of artillery on March 9, 1861, he took part in the reduction of Sumter, served in Pensacola on the staff of General Gladden; and at Shiloh, commanded a battery with the rank of Captain. He distinguished himself at Murfreesboro where he was promoted to Major, and led a battalion in Longstreet's Corps at Chickamauga. In January 1864 he was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel and placed in command of the artillery of Wheeler's cavalry corps, with which he served during the Atlanta campaign. Promoted Brigadier General on July 26, 1864, he served for a time as Wheeler's Chief of Staff, then led a Brigade composed of 8th and 10th Texas, and 4th Tennessee cavalry regiments. He was leading a Division of cavalry until he was severely wounded at Buckhead Creek near Augusta, Georgia on November 29, 1864. He saw no further active service, but April 1865 he was sent by General Howell Cobb to treat for the surrender of the City of Macon with his old West Point classmate, Major General James H. Wilson.

After the war he returned to Waco, studying law. At the time of his death in Waco, April 20, 1928, he had for many years been the dean of the local bar.

He is buried in Oakwood Cemetery in Waco.
